National Screening Centre Joins the European Joint Action on Cancer Screening (EUCanScreen)

The National Screening Centre is pleased to announce its participation in the European Joint Action on Cancer Screening (EUCanScreen) through the new EU-Supported Cancer Screening Scheme. This initiative brings together EU Member States to strengthen cancer screening programmes, promote the sharing of best practices and support the delivery of high-quality, evidence-based screening services across Europe.

The overall aim of EUCanScreen is to reduce the burden of cancer by improving early detection and ensuring equitable access to organised cancer screening programmes throughout the EU. The project also supports countries in implementing the latest European recommendations on cancer screening and programme evaluation.

Since its establishment, the National Screening Centre has been committed to providing evidence-based, population-based cancer screening programmes that facilitate the early detection of cancer and precancerous conditions. Through structured invitation systems and multidisciplinary collaboration, the service continues to work towards improving health outcomes while ensuring that eligible individuals have timely access to screening.

Involvement in this project represents an important opportunity to collaborate with leading experts and screening programmes from across Europe. Through this partnership, the National Screening Centre will benefit from access to European expertise and best practices that will support the continued improvement of local cancer screening services.
